

Exciting Opportunity within International Business

Transfer Pricing

Are you interested in learning how international companies function?

Do you want to help MNEs drive sustainable practices and business development?

Do you want to be a part of a successful, driven, multi-cultural team?

We are looking for driven, analytical, and entrepreneurial graduate students to join our Transfer Pricing Team for a paid internship. Transfer pricing is a multi-faceted / multi-functional discipline in which economics, financial analysis, business, accounting, and tax merge. Transfer pricing refers to the pricing of cross-border transactions between companies within the same multinational group. Our work involves analyzing the value chains of multinational groups to ensure that taxation is aligned with value creation.

Work you'll do

We are currently seeking graduate students currently studying economics, law, or similar, to join our Transfer Pricing Group as interns to work in a team/project-based environment. We are in an expansion phase and are therefore looking for additional members for our team in Stockholm. This is a paid internship.

This internship offers an excellent opportunity to learn about different industries, operating models, value drivers, how businesses make decisions, and how companies organize themselves and achieve success. You will gain insight into how more than 60% of the global economy actually works.

As a transfer pricing intern at Deloitte you will have the opportunity to work in an international environment, as we work with multinational companies and cooperate closely with Deloitte offices all over the world. You will also have the possibility to assist in advising clients operating in various industries.

Responsibilities include devising and performing industry research and financial analysis of companies, communicating with clients to obtain factual and financial data, as well as drafting reports in support of our findings. Additional responsibilities include assisting with client marketing efforts and maintaining project files.

The start date is flexible, but not later than spring 2018. There is a possibility for interns to transition to full-time employment following the completion of their studies.

Qualifications

- Ongoing graduate studies in economics, finance, accounting, or international tax law preferred.
- Strong analytical abilities.
- Excellent verbal and written communication skills in Swedish and English.
- Experience using Microsoft Word, Excel, and PowerPoint.
- Works well in team-based environments.
- Attention to detail, the ability to balance multiple projects at the same time, and a willingness to work hard.

How to apply

You apply online. Your application should be in English and consist of a brief cover letter, CV and academic grades. We would like your application as soon as possible.

If you have questions regarding the application process, please contact Petra Lundgren, plundgren@deloitte.se

What impact will you make?

Every day, your work will make an impact that matters, while you thrive in a dynamic culture of inclusion, collaboration and high performance. We do not just aspire to make solutions. We wish to create an impact that makes a positive and crucial difference for the people around us, our clients and our society. Deloitte is where you'll find unlimited opportunities to succeed and realize your full potential.

We are looking forward to your application!